ELP 511: Comparative Higher Education

D. Bruce Johnstone

Professor of Higher and Comparative Education Emeritus
Former Director, Center for Comparative and Global Studies in Education

Tuesday, 4:10 – 6:50 pm, 553 Baldy Hall
Registration #23672 (3 Credit Hours)

This course is an introduction to the study of higher education from an international comparative perspective. All GSE students, both U.S. and international, in the programs of higher education, educational administration, educational culture, policy, and society, foreign and second language education, and bilingual education who want to develop the comparative perspective are welcome to join to further their international perspective in higher education. It is designed especially for masters and doctoral students who may be interested in:

- Examining higher education from an international, comparative global perspective to better understand US colleges and universities;
- Preparing for administrative positions in colleges and universities that may require an understanding of international students (e.g. admissions or student affairs);
- Preparing to return to a university in a home country to take either an administrative or a faculty position and who wish to know more about how colleges and universities operate worldwide;
- Understanding what we in the US may learn from higher education in the UK, France, Germany, China, Korea, Latin America, the Middle East, or Africa;
- And many other gems that GSE students should know!
